METRO BOSTON

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

Remember the insanity of a few years back, when Boston held that Patriots parade on a Tuesday, right after Mother Nature dumped about 88 inches of snow on us? And back in 2004, when the Red Sox won it all and it rained on parade day? Thankfully the city is doing things right this year by having the parade three days after the title clincher. The extra day in between gives everyone a chance to get their collective poop together, and to reset their livers for another citywide party. For more on the Red Sox winning it all, please see pages 11 and 12 as well as metro.boston.us.

RED SOX WORLD SERIES
PARADE ANNOUNCED

I Cue the duck boats, because Boston is ready to celebrate with another Red Sox World Series parade. The Red Sox World Series victory parade is set for Wednesday, Oct. 31, Boston Mayor Marty Walsh announced on Monday. The Boston Red Sox won Game 5 of the World Series on Sunday night against the Dodgers in Los Angeles. Now, the only concern fans have is when they can take to the streets to commemorate the win. The Red Sox World Series parade route will set off from Fenway Park at 11 a.m., go down Lansdowne Street and take a right on Ipswich Street. The victory parade will then turn left on Boylston Street and follow that down to take a left on Tremont Street. The Boston duck boat parade will follow Tremont onto Cambridge Street and end at Staniford Street. There will be no rally at City Hall Plaza, Walsh said, just the Wednesday morning parade. There will be an increased presence of Boston police and transit police on Wednesday, officials said. No public drinking or weapons will be tolerated, Boston Police Commissioner William Gross added. For more information, visit boston.gov/redsoxparade.

189 FEARED DEAD IN
INDONESIAN PLANE CRASH

2 An Indonesian airliner crashed into the sea on Monday, with the likely loss of all 189 people on board, as it tried to return to Jakarta minutes after takeoff. Lion Air Flight JT610, an almost new Boeing 737 MAX 8, was en route from the capital to Pangkal Pinang, center of the Bangka-Belitung tin mining region. Rescue officials said they had recovered human remains from the crash site, about 9 miles off the coast. Indonesia is one of the world's fastest-growing aviation markets, but its safety record is patchy. If all aboard have died, the crash will be its second-worst air disaster since 1997, industry experts said. The pilot had asked to return to base (RTB) shortly after takeoff. It lost contact with ground staff after 13 minutes. "An RTB was requested and had been approved but we're still trying to figure out the reason," Soerjanto Tjahjono, head of Indonesia's transport safety committee, told reporters, referring to the pilot's request. "We hope the black box is not far from the main wreckage so it can be found soon," he said, referring to the cockpit voice recorder and flight data recorder.

ELON MUSK: 'I'M NOW
THE NOTHING OF TESLA'

4 Tesla Inc. Chief Executive Officer Elon Musk took to Twitter on Monday, saying he deleted his Tesla titles last week to see what would happen, without giving further details. "Deleted my Tesla titles last week to see what would happen. I'm now the Nothing of Tesla. Seems fine so far," Musk said on Twitter. Tesla did not immediately respond to a request for comment. While Musk is referred to as chief executive in Tesla's investor relations web page, his biography page on the company website has no designation. The biography page had earlier referred to Musk as chairman, product architect and CEO. Musk has agreed to pay a $20 million fine and step aside as Tesla's chairman for three years to settle charges with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission related to his Aug. 7 tweet about taking Tesla private. Musk's compulsive tweeting and erratic behavior, which included smoking marijuana during a video interview, has raised concerns about his leadership, with several Wall Street analysts and some investors urging Tesla to appoint a strong second-in-command.

USA GYMNASTICS SUED
OVER SEX ABUSE SCANDAL

5 Two former USA Gymnastics national team members on Monday filed civil lawsuits against the organization, disgraced ex-team doctor Larry Nassar, and the U.S. Olympic Committee for failing to prevent sexual assault of young women in their care. Tasha Schwickert, 33, who won a bronze medal at the 2000 Sydney Olympics, and her sister Jordan, 32, described themselves as Nassar victims during a news conference at a Los Angeles law firm. The complaint, filed in the Los Angeles County Superior Court, seeks to hold the defendants accountable, alleging the Schwickerts were referred to Nassar for medical treatment, "even though it knew or should have known of Nassar's sexual abuse and could have prevented it by taking sexual abuse allegations seriously and maintaining a culture of accountability and transparency." Nassar was sentenced in February to up to 125 years in prison after some 200 women, including Olympians, testified about decades of abuse at his hands. Both USA Gymnastics and the USOC did not immediately respond when asked to comment on the lawsuits.

Pittsburgh synagogue massacre suspect held without bond

The president and first lady will travel to Pennsylvania to pay respects to the 11 murdered.

Shackled and in a wheelchair, the man accused of shooting 11 worshippers to death at a Pittsburgh synagogue made a stony-faced and largely silent appearance on Monday in a federal courtroom, where he was ordered held without bond for the deadliest attack ever on America's Jewish community.

Robert Bowers, 46, who was wounded in a gunfight with police at the synagogue on Saturday, acknowledged the 29 charges against him, which could lead to his execution if found guilty.

Bowers, who has a history of posting anti-Semitic material online, will get a court-appointed attorney and was remanded to custody of U.S. Marshals. His next hearing is set for Thursday.

"Robert Bowers murdered 11 people who were exercising their religious beliefs," U.S. Attorney Scott Brady said after the arraignment, adding that a grand jury would hear details of the crime within 30 days.

The synagogue massacre has heightened debate over the rhetoric President Donald Trump uses, with critics saying it has encouraged right-wing extremism, which the administration rejects. But a group of Jewish leaders told Trump in an open letter that he was "not welcome in Pittsburgh until you fully denounce white nationalism."

Despite that, Trump and his wife, Melania, will travel to Pennsylvania on Tuesday to "express the support of the American people and grieve with the Pittsburgh community," White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said at a briefing.

Bowers' arraignment was marked by a heavy security presence that included police officers with dogs and a team of sharpshooters at the federal court in Pittsburgh.

Wearing a blue sweatshirt, gray sweatpants, sandals and white socks, with a crewcut and bald spot, Bowers remained expressionless throughout the short hearing.

"Robert Bowers murdered 11 people who were exercising their religious beliefs."

Scott Brady,
U.S. attorney

The charges against him include violation of U.S. civil rights laws in what federal prosecutors say was a hate crime.

Bowers only spoke during the hearing to give his name, state charges against him and to say that he lacked the funds to pay for an attorney to represent him.

He spoke in a calm voice and signed the papers handed to him with a steady hand.

Only at the end of the hearing, when he was wheeled out of the courtroom, did Bowers appear unsettled, turning his head in apparent confusion. REUTERS

What to know about ballot Question 2

Despite a lack of attention, next Tuesday could be a historic win for campaign finance reform, supporters say.

Massachusetts ballot Question 2 tackles campaign finance.

VOTE YES ON 2 MASSACHUSETTS/FACEBOOK

Massachusetts voters have seen a lot of back and forth around the transgender rights and nurse staffing ballot questions, but they haven't been inundated with ads supporting or opposing Question 2, which concerns campaign finance reform.

Why? Well, there hasn't been any spending on advertising from either side.

Massachusetts ballot Question 2 is the least controversial ballot question, but it tackles a big issue — campaign spending. The measure asks voters to create a citizens commission tasked with researching and reporting on "dark money" spent in Massachusetts elections and then to make recommendations for what a 28th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution "could and should say," said Ben Gubits, political director of American Promise.

American Promise is a national organization aimed at amending the Constitution by overturning Supreme Court decisions like Citizens United, which ruled that political spending is a form of a free speech, thus allowing unlimited campaign spending by corporations and unions.

The organization supports Massachusetts ballot Question 2, which has seen high public support — 71 percent in favor, according to a recent poll. The campaign's lack of advertisements speaks to what can be done in politics without a lot of money, according to Gubits.

"We're putting to the test the notion that you need millions of dollars to run an effective ballot campaign," he said. "With enough support and enough consensus, you can do pretty amazing things with direct democracy."

A "yes" vote on Massachusetts ballot Question 2 would establish this commission, which would be made up of 15 volunteers who will apply and then be appointed by the Massachusetts governor, secretary of state, speaker of the house and senate president.

The Massachusetts Fiscal Alliance wrote the opposition statement for the secretary of state's Voter Guide on Ballot Question 2, asking people to vote "no." The organization, which advocates for "fiscal responsibility, transparency, and accountability in state government," has two main issues with the ballot measure.

Paul Craney, spokesman for the alliance, said this could restrict the First Amendment rights, mainly freedom of speech, of nonprofits, corporations and unions. An amendment would mean that the government is regulating speech, he said, but he believes Citizens United is "fair and clear" when it comes to allowing free speech for all.

"It allows all different voices to have as much voice as they want as long as they have the funds to do it," he said. "You can't really argue with that."

The alliance's other issue is with the citizens commission itself. The idea that elected officials are picking these members as their surrogates, Craney said, would mean its work would benefit the elected officials over the public.

Gubits said his organization would work to ensure that the committee is a diverse representation of the commonwealth across geographical, political, socioeconomic and age lines. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

The hit political drama series returns to Netflix on Friday.

Constance Zimmer on the role of journalism in 'House of Cards' season 6

The actress opens up about making sure "journalists weren't mad" at her.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

Following the murder of Zoe Barnes (Kate Mara) on "House of Cards," fellow reporter Janine Skorsky (Constance Zimmer) fled Washington, D.C. in the hopes of avoiding Frank Underwood's (Kevin Spacey) increasingly dangerous influence. The cynical and oftentimes bitter print journalist was suddenly scared into submission, and her caution has lasted for many seasons.

Come season 6, however, viewers will find a more determined and less afraid Skorsky following a new story, one that ultimately brings her back home.

"I definitely think it is what drives her," Zimmer tells Metro of her character's outlook on the world. "She can't be complacent. She can't take things at face value. And that is definitely what keeps her going now."

"It's crazy how the role of a journalist has changed so much in the last five years," she continues. She's not wrong, either, for in an age when a presidential administration regularly piles the blame for so many of the country's problems on the "fake news media," Zimmer believes now more than ever that Skorsky should be doing right by working journalists.

"I had to make it believable. I had to make sure that journalists weren't mad at me, especially that my character left early on," she says. "That was really fun, but it was also a really big challenge. I wanted to make sure everybody understood that I might be fleeing at the moment, but I wouldn't stop fighting. It was just a matter of when I would come back and fight."

And that is precisely what the "UnREAL" and "Bojack Horseman" actress has been doing for the past few years on "House of Cards." Yes, Skorsky fled in the aftermath of Barnes' murder, and yes, she's spent most of the previous seasons living (and hiding) in the Ithaca, New York area. But now that Frank is dead and Claire Underwood (Robyn Wright) is president, she's coming back for one last story.

"My favorite thing on every single red carpet I ever did, was that every single journalist would say, 'Please just tell me that Janine is still alive!' I would always tell them that she was still alive and that there was still hope. With hope, we can get answers. I've always stood by that, so I'm really excited now that she's back doing her thing this season, with new challenges."

Among those challenges: the wealthy Shepherd siblings Bill and Annette, played by Greg Kinnear and Diane Lane. As audiences will find out on Friday, the pair proves to be one of the nastier thorns in Claire's side now that she's in the White House. But never fear, because Skorsky is on the case. But will she meet a fate like Barnes before her, or live to tell the tale?

"The biggest challenge at first was outlasting Zoe, which was never, ever part of the original story," says Zimmer. "So when Janine outlasted Zoe, I was like, 'Where does that get us?'"

The sixth and final season of "House of Cards" streams Friday on Netflix.

Guster looks into the future on new album 'Look Alive'

We talked with songwriter Ryan Miller about the band's bold new direction on their striking eighth album.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

The long-running indie-rock band Guster have come a long way from their earliest days of playing as a three-piece band in coffee shops in Somerville, Mass. Back then, they were defined as much by the songwriting talents and harmonies of lead singers Ryan Miller and Adam Gardner as they were by the hand-drum-only approach of drummer Brian Rosenworcel. But by following Guster from album to album, fans have been rewarded as each new album has expanded upon their sound while maintaining their dedication to pop songcraft. The band will release their eighth record, "Look Alive," on Jan. 18, and from the sounds of the record's first two singles — "Hard Times" and "Don't Go" — it seems as though the band will be entering a completely new sonic territory than what most fans are used to. Their first new music since 2015's "Evermotion," the songs overflow with layered synths that give the band a much bigger overall sound but still maintain their gorgeous sense of melody. We caught up with Ryan Miller to talk about this new direction for the band.

You're about to release your eighth studio album, "Look Alive," and the first two songs, "Don't Go" and "Hard Times," have a bigger sound than fans are used to. With your last record you hinted at this when working with the late, great Richard Swift. What was the approach to writing and recording this time? I think that we think about things in terms of fidelity, too. Whereas with Swift, the thing that he did really well with Foxygen, Damien Jurado and his own records was that they had this crazy vibe but they weren't really audiophile records by a long shot. I never thought that I could put on a Swift record and feel like it was something you could tune your PA to. That's what we loved about him and what we loved about the process. There were a lot of first takes and a lot of, "Let's go record this fast." That informed so much about how we approached it.

Actually, we recorded this record pretty quickly as well. This new record is a nine-song record and eight of the songs were recorded with Leo Abrahams. He was an equally gigantic force in the record. Obviously, we've developed a lot as songwriters and sonic people. But, it was such a strong mind-meld with Leo, pretty much right from the beginning. His imprint is all over it and a lot of that stuff that comes in has a lot of synth-y energy on the record. It's a much more audiophile record. It is one of those records you would ultimately tune your PA to because there's a lot of sonic exploration that we haven't done before.

It feels like your band has a lot in common with some of the more rewarding bands in alternative rock — like Low and Wilco — where you started with a very minimal setup and have expanded your sound over the years. Is that always a conscious effort with each new Guster album you work on? I don't really think of it in terms of layering stuff, like, "Okay, here's our bass player and now we're going to do this." But I think it was very cognizant to kind of explore sonically, dynamically, and rhythmically things that were changing from record to record. I think that's our thing, where we make a record and play it for a couple of years and ask, "Where do we want to go?" I don't think we've ever thought after a record cycle, "Cool. Well, we did great on the last one. Let's just do that again."

It's hard for me to know. I feel like our band goes through eras or big stretches. I think if you look at a band like Low or Wilco, you can put them into eras. I feel like we are going to make more records with Leo. That didn't really ever happen with when we worked with Swift. We thought it was great and that we would work together in other capacities. But, I feel like this thing that we stumbled into with Leo feels like something we are going to be pursuing and trying to better. So, I feel like this is a really hard chapter for our band, starting with this record.

When I play it, I basically have been sitting in my friends' cars and been playing it for them. They all react very similarly. There's a big jaw-drop-y moment with the record. There are a lot of different kinds of songs on this record.

I really don't know how to talk about the record yet. We haven't really had press to even bounce off of. We're so close to it [the release date]! But in playing it for friends, it all feels very confident to me. It feels very fearless in a lot of ways. We are just very confident in terms of thinking this feels musical to us. There's going to be some kind of baseline of melody and arrangement so it doesn't feel so disparate. It's very exciting for us in a different way than making the Swift album was exciting for us.

Sweet treats for Halloween

What's the magical phrase for getting something good to eat this time of year? We're thinking it goes something like, "Trick or treat!" No doubt, the Halloween season offers plenty of tricks, but there are plenty of treats, too. You just have to know where to look — and what to bake! Luckily, we have a few Halloween-inspired delights that are pre-bubbling in our creative cauldron. Sorry, make that creative kitchen — we're not witches. Or are we? KATELYN CHEF

WITCH FINGERS

Witch fingers or pretzel rods drizzled with melted chocolate and almonds? You decide.

Ingredients

- 28 blanched almonds
- 1 tube black gel food coloring
- 14 large pretzel rods
- 12 oz. bright-green candy coating

Recipe

- Use a small food-safe paintbrush to paint the top of each almond with black gel food coloring. (Wear food-safe gloves if you want to avoid getting your fingertips dyed black as well.)
- Set aside on waxed paper or parchment paper to dry while you prepare the rest of the recipe.
- Break or cut each pretzel rod in half.
- Place the green candy coating in a small but deep microwave-safe bowl (or heatproof cup) and microwave in 30-second increments, stirring after every 30 seconds to prevent overheating and burning. Stir and heat until the candy coating is completely melted and smooth.
- Holding a pretzel rod by the unbroken end, dip it in the green coating until almost all of it is covered, leaving about - a 1/2-inch section undipped at the top where you are holding it.

- Place the dipped pretzel on the same lined baking sheet you used to dry the black candy-coated almond nails and immediately press one of them on the tip of the pretzel rod that is coated in green candy coating.
- Continue to dip more pretzels and, while you do, keep an eye on the already-dipped pretzels. When the coating has started to dry and is mostly matte but not completely hard, it's time to add the wrinkles for the knuckles.
- Take a toothpick and hold it perpendicular to the pretzels. Gently roll it across the top to add wrinkles. Make two sets — one set near the fingernail, and one set about halfway down the finger. This will make your witch finger super realistic-looking. If the coating is too melted and sticky when you try, give it a few more minutes to set before trying again.
- After all the pretzels have been dipped and decorated, refrigerate the tray for 10 minutes to set the coating completely. After that, the witch fingers can be served on a party tray or standing upright in a mason jar.

BLOODY TRUFFLES

Ingredients

- 1 box cake mix
- 16 oz. prepared frosting
- 1 lb. white candy coating
- 48 royal icing weapons (knives, axes, or similar edible weapons)
- 1 tube red gel food coloring

Recipe

- Bake the cake mix according to the directions on the package.
- Crumble the cake into a large bowl.
- Spoon 3/4 of the frosting into

- the bowl and stir with a rubber spatula until the mixture is well-combined.
- Scoop out 1-inch balls of cake and roll between your palms until they are round.
- Place the cake balls on a baking sheet covered with parchment or waxed paper, and refrigerate them until firm.
- Place the candy coating in a medium microwave-safe bowl and microwave it until melted, stirring after every 45 seconds to prevent overheating.
- Cover a baking sheet with waxed paper.

- Using dipping tools or a fork, submerge a cake ball in the melted candy coating. Place the dipped truffle back on the baking sheet. While the chocolate is still wet, firmly press a royal icing knife or ax into the truffle.
- Once all of the cake balls are dipped, refrigerate the truffles to set the coating completely, about 20 minutes.
- Take a clean paintbrush and brush some red gel food coloring around the tops of the truffles where the royal icing decorations are.

MEATBALL MONSTER SLIDERS

Monsters need protein, too. Don't let these meatball "monster" sliders size fool you — they're so good, it's scary!

Ingredients

- 24 frozen precooked meatballs
- 2 cups spaghetti or pasta sauce
- 12 mini whole wheat sandwich buns
- 3 tablespoons softened butter
- 24 pimento-stuffed olive slices

Recipe

- In a medium saucepan, combine the frozen meatballs with the spaghetti sauce. Bring to a simmer over low heat, stirring frequently. Cook until the meatballs are thawed and well heated, about 6 to 7 min- utes. Stir the mixture frequently so it doesn't burn.

- You may want to add a tablespoon or two of water toward

- the end of the cooking time if the pasta sauce starts sticking to the pan. When the meatballs are hot, remove the pan from the heat, cover, and set aside.
- Cut the sandwich buns in half and spread softened butter on each side. Toast in an oven or under the broiler until the buns are light golden brown.
- To assemble, place two meatballs, along with some of the sauce, on the bottom of each toasted bun. Top each meatball with a slice of olive, then put the tops of the buns on the meatballs at an angle. You can use a toothpick to hold the whole thing together if you'd like.
- Serve immediately and remind the kids to remove the toothpicks before they dig in!

2018 The best Sox team ever

Ranking the championship Red Sox teams of the past
14 years.MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

On almost all of the dozens of DVDs that were released following the Red Sox's 2004 title that broke the Curse of the Bambino is a clip of pitcher Curt Schilling toasting his teammates and screaming, "To the greatest Red Sox team EVER!!!!"

At the time, Schilling was probably right. That 2004 group was stacked and likely would have been able to handle those early-1900s teams. (Of course, anyone who objects to this is likely dead.)

All we can really compare the 2018 championship team to are the three other teams that won it all this century — the 2004, 2007 and 2013 teams. Here are the Red Sox championship team power rankings, in which we make the case that the 2018 Sox are indeed the best Boston baseball team ever.

4. 2013

The 2013 Sox came out of nowhere to win it all, a year after going 69-93 under Bobby Valentine. But if there ever was a "fluke" champion in MLB, this was the group. The very next year, in 2014, basically the same group of guys finished dead last in the AL East with a 71-91 record. The Mike Napoli's, Jonny Gomes' and Will Middlebrooks' of the world were great that one year in 2013, but it was most certainly a "lightning in a bottle" deal.

J.D. Martinez and Mookie Betts celebrate a World Series title this past Sunday night at Dodger Stadium. GETTY IMAGES

3. 2004

In terms of star quality, the 2004 "idiots" were the best. In terms of elite play, they lag behind the 2007 and 2018 teams. In '04, Pedro was not quite as great as he was earlier in the decade. They also relied on dudes like Mark Bellhorn, Kevin Millar, "Brandon" Arroyo (as Tim McCarver would say) and Gabe Kapler.

Yeah, they made the greatest comeback in baseball history against the Yankees. But a bounce here or there and they could have been swept in that series.

The 2004 Sox went 98-64 in the regular season and got into the playoffs via the wild card. They went 11-3 in the playoffs.

2. 2007

There wasn't really a hole in the 2007 Red Sox's lineup as Manny Ramirez was still hitting at an elite level, David Ortiz was in his absolute prime and Dustin Pedroia won AL Rookie of the Year. Josh Beckett was money that season. Same with a young Jon Lester and Jonathan Papelbon.

This group went 96-66 in the regular season and 11-3 in the postseason but they were extended to a Game 7 in the ALCS by Cleveland.

1. 2018

You know the deal. One hundred eight wins. The most in franchise history. An outstanding young outfield. Two MVP candidates in Mookie Betts and J.D. Martinez. The best pitcher in baseball (when healthy) in Chris Sale. A brilliant manager in Alex Cora.

If you want to nitpick with this group, you can say that the bullpen was not as strong as some of the previous teams. Remember, Nathan Eovaldi is actually a starter. And whom would you trust the most to close out a game in October: Keith Foulke in '04, Papelbon in '07, Koji Uehara in 2013 or Craig Kimbrel this year?

Kimbrel is not winning that poll often.

Still, the 2018 team takes the cake here. They have the most wins by a lot, and the most talent.

Cora, Martinez champions in Year 1

Boston's newbies win a title right out of the gate.

RICH SLATE
sports@metro.us

It can't possibly be as easy as manager Alex Cora and star hitter J.D. Martinez just made it look, right?

In his first-ever season as a MLB manager, Cora became the first Puerto Rican to lead his team to a World Series championship as the Red Sox beat the Dodgers four games to one with a 5-1 victory on Sunday night at Dodger Stadium. Not to be outdone, Martinez turned in by far the best first season in franchise history for a free agent as he ravaged MLB in the regular season (.330 AVG, .402 OBP, .629 SLG, 43 HRs and 130 RBIs), and his success only continued in October as he paced Boston with a .300 AVG, .403 OBP, .520 SLG, 3 HRs (one in each playoff round) and a team-high 14 RBIs. If not for teammate Mookie Betts' similarly brilliant 2018 campaign (.346 AVG, .438 OBP, .640 SLG, 32 HRs, 80 RBIs, 30 SB), Martinez would be a lock for American League MVP.

After two AL East pennants in a row but back-to-back first-round exits in the playoffs, these Sox didn't enter the season with such sky-high expectations, but they quickly rewrote team history with a franchise-record 108 wins in the regular season followed by an incredibly impressive playoff run where they went 11-3 overall. In fact, they beat consecutive 100-win clubs from the American League (Yankees and Astros) before vanquishing a team (Dodgers) that had lost in Game 7 of the World Series last October. Their resume, being considered one of the best in the long-storied history of the Red Sox, is about as solid as can be. In fact, only the 1998 Yankees (generally considered the best team in modern MLB) is the only one with more wins (regular season and postseason combined) than these Red Sox.

The scary part for the rest of MLB is that

Alex Cora celebrates a World Series championship Sunday in Los Angeles. GETTY IMAGES

Boston is still a relatively young team with a great nucleus. Being managed by Cora (who made all the right moves in the playoffs and really coached circles around L.A.'s Dave Roberts all series) and with Martinez in his prime (he's 31 with four years left on what looks like a bargain of a contract — now 5 years for $110 million — that he signed last February), this group isn't going anywhere for the next few years. You can't expect World Series crowns every fall, but Cora's calm demeanor and ability to connect with his players should give Red Sox fans plenty of confidence that he's a star in his new chosen field.

Likewise, Martinez's renowned work ethic has gotten him this far so it's doubtful that this will suddenly make him give up his maniacal routines and obsession with the craft of hitting. These guys are both prideful winners who seem built for long-term success in Boston.

Who could doubt either of them at this point?

Aries Be willing to do something for others if you want something in return. Offering a fair and equal partnership will help you gain respect and the help you need to move forward.

Taurus You'll have plenty of options to choose from. Review the possibilities and the long-term effects that could result. An open discussion will broaden your vision. Romance will enhance your life.

Gemini Put everything at your disposal into getting ahead. Living up to your promises and taking care of your responsibilities will ward off complaints and interference.

Cancer Put your best foot forward. If you're doing something creative or joining forces with someone else, the more flexible you are, the better.

Leo Emotions will get in the way of a good decision. Don't let stubbornness or insecurity stand between you and what you want. Make your position clear, but be willing to listen and compromise.

Virgo Sign up for a cause that will benefit your community. The people you encounter will be impressed with the cut of your jib, and interesting proposals will be offered.

Libra Staying focused and living up to your expectations and promises will pay off. Don't leave room for error or complaints. Put your energy where it counts the most.

Scorpio Learn through observation. The best way to get others to see things your way is to offer incentives and to treat them with respect. A positive attitude can make a difference.

Sagittarius Keep changes to a minimum. Make the most with what you have available. Rely on your resourcefulness, and don't pay attention to hearsay. Look for substance and honesty and eschew rhetoric.

Capricorn Make your position clear. Whether dealing with a personal or professional matter, lay down ground rules and form a foolproof strategy that will benefit everyone.

Aquarius Evaluate your situation and the choices available to you. Anger will not solve problems or help you move forward. If you ask for something, expect to give something in return.

Pisces Explore your ideas and share them with people you feel close to. The changes that will result from your words and actions will pave the way to a brighter future. EUGENIA LAST
